ONE TINY SHIP. ONE HUGE EXPANSE OF AETHERSPACE. Maneuver your ship through the vast aether in The Aether Sea, a Fate world and adventure by Ed Turner. A thousand years of war on Homeworld left it a magically-blighted wasteland, so the elves and dwarves stopped fighting for five minutes and figured out how to leave it behind. Soon everyone took to the vast, empty aether sea. But the Royal Hegemony keeps a tight rein on the Spellcasters Union, and the magic that makes aether travel possible. Play the crew of a little aethercraft out in the deep sea. But you've got bad blood with the Royals, so take jobs carefully and make do with the best magic unofficial channels can provide. Keeping the ship afloat won't be easy. The sea is a dark and lonely place, and secondhand magic is... fussy. When it works at all. The Aether Sea requires Fate Core or Fate Accelerated to play. This 44-page supplement contains: New race creation rules using Fate Accelerated style approaches. A simple, easy-to-use magic system, including systems for dabbling in magic, using cantrips for specific magical tasks, and spells and artifacts. Ideas for aethercraft, including aspects, combat, and maneuvering through space. A full starter adventure: It's Only an Elven Moon. THE AETHER SEA. BATTEN DOWN THE HATCHES AND GET READY FOR LIFTOFF.

Good ideas, but don't care for the background

By Michael A. Johnson

I generally don't care for the art. Why is space mostly red, and so crowded with unknown things that you have trouble figuring out the picture? Why travel from planet to planet if no one makes any profit, as you only earn enough for repairs and expenses? But on the other hand it mainly uses Fate Accelerated - which I prefer. Other species (not called races as in other rpg's) are made so simply it requires only one non-binding Approach change, and a new title (This one's an Orc, that one's an Elf). Two easy to use magic styles. Raw untrained magic - which can backfire, and worked out safe but taking time magic. Includes a scenario and some suggestions for others.

So I will use the species and magic, but I think I will avoid the background campaign.
